BEES & QUEENS

All shipments of bees into Vermont require a valid Health Certificate from the state of origin. There may be additional requirements for full size colonies; check with the State Apiculturist. As the situation with Africanized Bees or other pests changes in the U.S., restrictions may again be imposed on bee shipments into Vermont. Reminder: All bee colonies are required by law to be registered with the Vermont Agency of Agriculture. Contact the Apiculturist for an application.

Slide Sets, Videos

There are many excellent slide sets and videos now available. One major supplier in the Northeast is Beekeeping Education Service, P.O. Box 817, Cheshire, CT 06410-0817. E-mail: LJConnor@aol.com, or www.wicwas.com. This supplier also stocks most bee books, (even some out of print), including those listed here. Contact Mr. Connor for a listing of what is currently available. Also check the major equipment supply catalogs for newly released book titles and videos.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

The United States Department of Agriculture has honey bee research laboratories in Arizona, Louisiana, Maryland, Texas, and Utah. These labs maintain a close association with the state land-grant colleges, and some teaching and extension are usually done with persons interested in beekeeping. The USDA has bulletins and leaflets about many aspects of beekeeping. A list of these may be obtained by writing: Bee Research Laboratory, Room 209A, Building 476, BARC-East, Beltsville, MD 20705; www.ars.usda.gov/main/site_main.htm?mode.code=12-75-05-00

THE INTERNET

There are literally hundreds of references on the internet related to bees and beekeeping. One good place to start is titled "Where to go for more information on bees", which can be found at www.ibra.org.uk/. Also see: www.pollinator.com, maarec.cas.psu.edu/.

The Vermont Agency of Agriculture can help with many questions about bees and beekeeping.
